

The Dragon Mayan Glyph

The Dragon glyph is ruled by Neptune and represents unity, water, blood, primal mother, and is the source of life. Dragon is the Mother Goddess. Moving from the formless void into the waters of life, she is red like blood and magnetic. She is the psychic factor of bonding universes, the supraconscious of primal existence. She bonds in unity.

The Mayan glyphs tell the story of creation. The Dragon is the first glyph in the creation series. It talks about how the earth was without form, and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters.

The mother principle of water and form taking shape from the void were briefly attributed in Genesis to the Spirit of God upon the face of the waters. The first calendar glyph Dragon corresponds with the first act of creation in Genesis as a creative principle.

Only the Supreme Spirit, the great Self-existing Power, the Creator, the Seven-Headed Serpent moved within the abyss of darkness in the Naga Maya creation myth. In the desire to create worlds, seven intellectual commands were given by the Seven-Headed Serpent.

The gases that were scattered and without form were brought together in a swirling mass of energy. The gases were solidified and volumes were left on the outside from which water and the atmosphere were formed. Darkness prevailed and there was no sound because neither water nor atmosphere had been formed. The gases were separated; one part went to form the waters, and the waters covered the earth so that no land appeared anywhere. The gases that did not form the waters formed the atmosphere.

We just entered the year of the Water Dragon on January 23, 2012, and we just finished the Mayan calendar, as interpreted by Carl Calleman on October 28, 2011. We are now entering Unity consciousness. The seed was planted on November 11, 2011 when the whole world celebrated together. This year is the beginning of the age of Unity.

On February 3, 2012 Neptune entered its own sign of Pisces, which is a water sign. This planet will be dominant for several years. Neptune is the female Goddess energy.

On May 20, 2012 there will be a solar eclipse with our Sun lined up with our central Sun Alcyone in the Pleiadian Star System. This is a 25,920 year cycle and I think we have reached the end of that cycle and are starting a new cycle of Love and Unity. Venus rules Taurus, and there will be a major Venus transit on June 5-6 when Venus eclipses our Sun.

Saturn is in Libra, which is the balance. We are now in the process of balancing the male and female principle together into one, which is unity consciousness. We have a very interesting and exciting year ahead of us. As long as we think with our hearts we will be able to weather the many changes that will happen this year. And don't forget that we are in the year of magic and miracles.
